Dear George: Herman

That you are willing to take my word is pleasing but, especially if you are going to the expense of making a check in England, would I prefer that you do not have to.

I worked until 1 o'clock, which was too late to comb my files and haven't time this morning to dig out the original letter from Milton's chief clerk. Therefore, I have made you a copy of that page of the book where the language is directly quoted and is readily accessible to me.

While in the bokk, I thought you might be interested in having the exact language of the judge on the Court of Appeals who, as I told you, I must protect, so it, too, is attachwd.

Then there is Canale's statement to me through a deputy that "None of the evidence not in the transcript will be available to anyone."

All three pertinent quotes are marked to save you time.

Sincerely,

Harold
